

The Atlantic: Trump's Money Problems Are Becoming A Crisis For The Entire Country

In "Trump's Money Problems Are Becoming A Crisis For The Entire Country" (The Atlantic, May 23, 2024), The Atlantic discusses the issues surrounding former President Donald Trump's financial troubles and their potential impact on his decision-making if he were to be re-elected.

The article discusses how Trump's financial difficulties could lead to potential conflicts of interest and how wealthy donors might influence his decision-making. Pollock Cohen managing partner, Adam Pollock, commented, "In this day and age, nobody ever prosecutes those kinds of in-kind contributions anymore, ever. But there's a reason those laws exist. It's because you don't want to provide that kind of untoward access to how money corrupts politics. And I think we're all just so jaded."
